Library hosts new on-ramp to information superhighway

Local residents have a new on-ramp to the information superhighway.

The Hoopeston Public Library, along with libraries in Clifton, Cissna Park, Sheldon and Watseka, have formed Rurilnet, a community information network.

Rurilnet allows anyone in Vermilion and Iroquois counties to put information about a business or special interest group on the Internet to be seen by people around the world.

Residents may become registered users on the Internet, gaining access to electronic mail, newsgroups, World Wide Web and LINC, the Lincoln Trail Libraries System shared online catalog.

Residents interested in using the system may fill out an application form at the library. At the same time, residents may select a log-in name and password to identify themselves on the Internet. The library will provide instructions on accessing the Internet from home computers.

Local man 'makes things beautiful again' in profession

For young people graduating from high school, career possibilities range from astrophysics to zoology. One Hoopeston man chose a field not many people enter.

Jeremiah Eyrich graduated Sept. 3 from Worsham College of Mortuary Science in Wheeling.

Eyrich is now serving his apprenticeship with the Wolfe Funeral Home chain, which has homes in Hoopeston and Rossville, among others.

Eyrich became interested in the field after seeing an Illinois Funeral Directors Museum display at a Hoopeston Sweetcorn Festival. He then worked at the Wolfe Funeral Homes to make sure that was the career he wanted.

The program is currently free to residents through a federal Library Services and Construction Act grant. The group received $88,201 to set up the network, said head librarian Lou Graham.

No fees will be charged until sometime next year. Those fees will be based on basic costs such as paying for telephone lines, as well as maintenance fees for the system. Those costs are undetermined, Graham said. "We're interested in watching this to see what maintenance costs might be," she said.

The number of users will also determine the cost. "Is it going to be so popular that we have to add more phone lines or will it be unpopular and we'll have to take some phone lines out," she said.

Patrons may also access LINC without becoming a registered Rurilnet user by dialing 283-7601 and login on as ltnet. At the password prompt, press enter, then follow instructions on the LTNET screen.

For more information, call the library, (217) 283-6711.

After graduating from Hoopeston Area High School, he attended Danville Area Community College for one year before taking the 12-month Worsham program.

At Worsham, he studied restorative art, embalming, anatomy, microbiology, pathology, psychology, sociology, funeral directing, accounting, speech communications, business management and chemistry.

While attending the mortuary school, Eyrich lived at and worked for a Chciago-area funeral home and spent time at the Cook County medical examiner's office.

Eyrich prefers the embalming aspect of his job, which includes making sure the deceased look their best. "I like to make things beautiful again," he said.
